The Rev. T. A. Hyland preached his farewell sermon Sunday afternoon, October 25, at the Church of the Holy Comforter for Sailors. The text chosen was, "And there was no more sea," Rev. xxi. 1. Under the headings of Change, Mystery, and Separation, typified by the sea, the preacher referred feelingly to the experiences of life. After the services Mr. Hyland took by the hand a large portion of his congregation who lingered to say goodbye. Mr. Hyland came to the Church of the Holy Comforter twelve years ago, at the call of the Board of Managers of the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen, and has been very successful in carrying on the work. His rheumatic troubles have led him, much to the regret of the society and of his people, to seek a change of climate, and he intends to go to Oregon, where he formerly labored.

The Churchman.

NEW YORK CITY.

The quarterly meeting of the Board of Managers of the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen was held in the Sunday-school room of Trinity chapel October 13, 1891.

The attendance at the services during the summer was over 4,500, about half of whom were sailors or boatmen. Over 10,000 visits were made to the reading-rooms; a large number of seamen were supplied with reading matter and about fifty were induced to sign a temperance pledge. The treasurer reported that he had made some advances to meet the current expenses.

Many of the churches in the diocese ignore Canon XVII. (so far as it relates to this society) which declares "The Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen in the city and port of New York is to be reckoned among the Church charities for which provision is to be made." It is earnestly hoped that funds will be forthcoming to replenish the treasury and that this down-town work along the river front shall not lack for support. The treasurer is Mr. J. J. Smith, 77 West Houston street.

NEW YORK CITY.

The Rev. Wm. Hawks Pott, of St. Thomas's chapel, with fifteen of his choir boys, assisted in the service last Sunday afternoon on pier six, East river. This is one of the stations of the Church Missionary Society for seamen. A tent is erected on the pier and morning and afternoon services are regularly held there every Sunday. The singing of Mr. Pott's boys attracted an unusual number, over two hundred being present. Mr. Pott preached from the text "Consider the lilies of the field, etc.," and drew the practical lesson that the Heavenly Father was not unmindful of His human creation. The crowd remained through the sermon and evinced much interest, many of them being the canal boatmen who abound in the neighborhood of pier six and for whose special benefit this station of the society is maintained.

THE REV. JOHN EMORY COOKMAN, D.D.

At midnight, on Easter Sunday, March 29, 1891, JOHN EMORY COOKMAN entered through the gates into the city.

He was born at Carlisle, Penn., on the 8th of June, 1838, his father being the Rev. George Grimston Cookman, who was chaplain of the United States Senate for three years, half a century ago, and was lost on one of the ill-fated steamships crossing the Atlantic. In 1847 the family moved to Philadelphia, and, as the Rev. Dr. William Suddards, rector of Grace Protestant Episcopal church, had been a lifelong friend of his father, John began his school life under his guardian care. He completed his college studies in Philadelphia, receiving the honors of his class and delivering the valedictory. After graduation he accompanied his mother and sister to Europe, spending six months abroad, travelling through Great Britain and on the Continent. Upon his return he felt impelled by the Spirit of God that he must take the vow for the office and work of the ministry. He immediately entered the school of theology at Concord, N. H. There was at this time a native eloquence in his youth that won all hearts. He had a fine voice of great compass and his manner was full of earnest emotion. There was also a freshness, a spiritual beauty that never departed from him. At the conclusion of his theological studies he entered upon his ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church. His mother would sometimes say to him, "My son, if you would be supremely happy or extremely useful you must be an entirely sanctified servant of Jesus." Here, then, was his power, "entire consecration to Jesus." It was the secret source of his marvellous success in winning men. His ministry commenced in New Brunswick, then Lenox, Poughkeepsie, Tremont street, Boston, and many leading churches in New York and Brooklyn. Multitudes followed him, won to Christ by his persuasive eloquence and spiritual power. He was a lover of men! About two years ago he felt God was calling him into the Protestant Episcopal Church. Bishop Potter, finding Dr. Cookman was influenced by the Spirit of God and seeking only the glory of God and the good of His Church, made the way plain for him to become a candidate for Holy Orders. He was at once appointed assistant-minister at the Church of Our Saviour. While his ministry to the seamen was brief all acknowledge it to have been one of great power and success. He presented a large confirmation class to Bishop Potter during the few months of his Church life. Everyone with whom he came in contact during his arduous labors in that thickly populated part of New York City said, "We believe he was a true Christian; we never expect to see another clergyman like him." The charm of his preaching was in the reality of it. Love to God and love to man was the culmination of his theology. There was great earnestness in his setting forth of these truths, because they had assumed a real power in his own heart and life. In fact, Dr. Cookman had a real "enthusiasm of humanity" which saw Christ's image in every man, and also the power of Christ's Gospel to bring it forth and to make that man an embodiment of the saving power of Christ, the great Saviour. A year ago he was seized with a severe illness, the result of hard work. He was a martyr to burning zeal! For many days his life was endangered; then he rallied sufficiently to be ordained deacon on Apostles' Day, in September. On the 15th of February he was ordained to the priesthood, the ordination taking place at Christ church, Riverdale. It was a very solemn and impressive service. Bishop Potter said to a friend, "I thought Dr. Cookman looked frail, but I felt such a courageous spirit must be preparing for greater service in the Church of God." A month after his ordination he became very ill, and a consultation of physicians decided he could live but a few days. No murmur escaped his lips, only heroic faith was manifested. He lingered through Passion Week and until Easter Day. At twenty minutes before 12 o'clock midnight, on Easter Sunday, he said to his sister, who sat at his bedside, "Raise me up." She gently lifted him and said, "Darling brother, shall I lay you down?" He bowed his head, and a seraphic smile illumined his face. She rested his head upon the pillow, and he was caught away to be with Jesus and the loved ones. The funeral services took place at Grace church, New York, Bishop Potter, Dr. Wilson, Dr. Morgan, Mr. Nelson, officiating. Bishop Potter made a touching allusion to his dear friend. He said: "A little more than a month ago Dr. Cookman was made presbyter in our beloved Church. I am sure that no one of us, remembering his rare gifts and graces, and above all his triumphant faith, can believe his life is ended. It comforts us to know that in other mansions of our Father's great house he will have a place—the quick and tender sympathy, the active intellect and loving heart, will yet find opportunity for his Lord's service. That service here, in the communion of the Church, has been most brief, but I venture to think that this large congregation, made up as I know mainly of those who knew him in other relations, will be glad to hear that his brief ministry in the Church in whose communion he died, was one of conspicuous excellence and usefulness. I am thankful to have known and watched him, for he bore himself with such singular gentleness and dignity, with such delicate consideration for others, with such admirable wisdom in the discharge of his ministerial duties as became an example to all. And so to day, as we stand about his bier, we are grateful for the privilege of having known and loved him! And we rejoice to believe that, though too soon, as it seems to us, his work here is ended, the influence of his clear and strong faith, of his gentle and Christian life, of his large and beautiful character will long endure to the glory of God and the good of His Church." In the family plot at Laurel Hill, near Philadelphia, his body rests in blessed hope of a day of resurrection. "Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead." "He is not here, He is risen."

"The strife is o'er, the battle done;
The victory of life is won;
The song of triumph has begun—
Alleluia!"

THE FLOATING CHURCH.

BUILT ON A SCOW AND WITH A CONGREGATION OF SEAMEN.

W. H. Vanderbilt Was a Parishioner
Once and Bishop Potter Has Always Been Much Interested in the Church of Our Saviour—Rector Walker's
Popularity Among the Sailors.

The floating Church of Our Saviour at the foot of Pike street has the most cosmopolitan congregation of any church in the city. Every Sunday seamen from every port in the world are in attendance. It is not rare. Sexton James Williams says, for sailors to come from Perth Amboy, Communipaw and Greenpoint.

THE FLOATING CHURCH.

The church, or rather the scow on which it floats, was built in John Engle's Greenpoint shipyard in 1869. The church building was added when the scow was moored. It cost $28,000 when completely furnished and has a Journey organ. The church is built entirely of yellow pine. The timber is four inches in thickness. It is 95 feet in length and 40 in width. The money to pay for the building was raised from the sale of the St. George's Church property, at Cliff and Beekman streets.

This money was divided between three churches, one of which was this floating church. Its dedication was in the Fall of 1869. The original church, which was supplanted by the present one, was built in 1844 upon two of the old-fashioned horse-power Fulton ferry-boats. It was built by Chas. M. Simonson for the Young Men's Church Missionary Society.

The first pastor of the floating church was the Rev. B. C. C. Parker. He was a genial, whole-souled man and a great favorite among the seamen and ship-carpenters, which were a large and prosperous class of the citizens of New York then. W. H. Vanderbilt was one of the Rev. Mr. Parker's communicants. He lived in the second story of one of the brick houses on East Broadway. He was just married and was struggling along as a clerk in the office of the Hudson River Railroad.

The Rev. Mr. Huntington succeeded the Rev. Mr. Parker upon the latter's death. The church did not grow very fast and Bishop Potter sent the Rev. Mr. Walker, whose death was announced last week and whose funeral will take place to-day from the floating church.

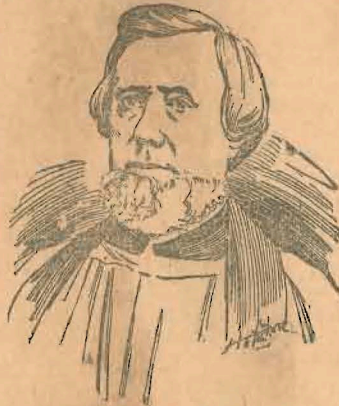

He did all in his power to build the church up, but never could get any other congregation than the sailors who came to this port. He will be buried in the sailors' plot among the seamen who have died in the last eighty years.

REACHED A HEAVENLY PORT.

Death of Pastor Walker, of the Seamen's Floating Church.

His Long and Effective Service in that Unique House of Worship.

Many an old, weather-beaten tar who has been in the habit of attending divine service at the floating Church of Our Saviour, will sincerely mourn the death of the pastor, Rev.

REV. ROBERT J. WALKER.

Robert J. Walker, whose figure was so well known along the river front, and whose congregation comprises communicants from all parts of the world.

For twenty years Mr. Walker has been in charge of the little structure, which is tied up at Pier 40, foot of Pike Slip, East River; but the weaknesses attendant upon old age have proven too much for the veteran divine, and he has at last entered that port towards which he has for years been piloting his seafaring flock.

Mr. Walker's pastorate over the floating church embraces a longer period than that of any of his predecessors.

He was born July 12, 1808, in Derry, Ireland, and was therefore eighty-two years of age. Young Walker had a natural inclination towards the sea, and, although he was never a sailor, he made a number of long voyages with his father, who was a sea captain.

The elder Walker came of that sturdy race which offered resistance to King James and were finally instrumental in making him and his descendants wanderers upon the earth.

He was also a descendant of Bishop Walker, whose zealous conduct in rousing the Irish at Londonderry in King William the Third's time is so graphically described by Macaulay in his "History of England."

Young Walker seems to have emulated his distinguished ancestors, for soon after coming to this country, in 1840, he went to Illinois, prepared himself for the ministry and was ordained a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church by Bishop Chase.

He was assigned to a church in Elgin, Ill., but remained there only a short time, as the climate did not agree with him, and he determined to come east.

Upon his arrival in this city he was assigned by Bishop Horatio Potter to the rectorship of the Church of the Messiah.

His interest in the spiritual welfare of seamen now became strongly manifest, and he took charge of the open-air church in Coenties slip.

In 1870, about two years after the completion of the present floating church at Pier 40, Mr. Walker was transferred to its charge, and since then his work there has been crowned with great success.

For years Mr. Walker has resided at the Seamen's Mission House, 34 Pike street, which, with the floating church, is under the control of the Young Men's Church Missionary Society of the City of New York.

Mr. Walker preached every Sunday morning and afternoon in the floating church, and sailors used to come from their ships from all over the harbor as well as from moorings in Brooklyn, Jersey City, Hoboken and up the North River to listen to his words of wisdom.

Mr. Walker's missionary labors seemed to agree with him wonderfully, and his sturdy and athletic figure was almost marvelous for a man of his age.

He used to laughingly tell his friends that he expected to live until he was one hundred years old, and they believed him.

Lately, however, his friends began to notice that he was failing rapidly and his decline in health could be attributed to no other cause than old age. Still he kept up the struggle manfully and did not weaken until the last moment.

For over a month he had been unable to conduct his Sunday services at the floating church, or his Wednesday night services at the Seamen's Home in Franklin Square, and his highly prized talks to seamen at the Mission in Pike street.

At his last Sunday service in the floating church, he was scarcely able to stand and had to be assisted back to the mission by Sexton Williams.

Feeling convinced that his voyage was nearly ended, the sturdy seafarer then reluctantly left the Mission House and went to the home of his son, David B. Walker, a druggist at 81 Hudson ave., Brooklyn, where he died peacefully early Thursday morning.

He leaves, beside this son, a daughter, who resides at Hightstown, N. J., his wife having died several years ago.

The funeral services will be held Monday at 3 o'clock, at the floating church, and burial will be in the sailors' plot at the Evergreens.

The Floating Church of Our Saviour for Seamen is one of the most interesting religious institutions in the city.

In 1843, several pious sea captains, among whom was Capt. George Briggs, one of the present trustees, conceived the idea of having a house of worship for seamen only, to be located on the water, where the sailors should feel more at home than when attending services in a church upon land.

NEWS FROM THE COURTS.

The Langdon Dock Cases—Mr. Cleveland's Decision Reversed.

Among the recent decisions of the General Term, First Department, is one reversing the decision given by ex-President Grover Cleveland as referee in the well-known Langdon dock lawsuits brought by different members of the Langdon and Astor families against the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the city of New York to recover damages for the taking by the city of certain wharfage rights on the North River, originally acquired by John Jacob Astor. These cases were explained at some length recently before the Senate Committee on Cities, when that body investigated the Dock Department. They have had a checkered career in the courts, having been before the Court of Appeals and several referees, including Augustus C. Brown, the late ex-Judge Hooper C. Van Voorst, and lastly Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. Brown originally awarded the plaintiffs $1,000 a running foot for their rights. This judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeals, which held that the referee had taken into consideration elements of value which should have been excluded, such as the possibility of shedding privileges, etc. The Court ordered a new trial, which took place before Judge Van Voorst. The referee's death prevented a decision being given, and necessitated a new reference. Mr. Cleveland was the referee appointed.

The testimony offered by the plaintiffs was of three sorts: (1.) The testimony of real-estate experts as to the value per foot of bulkhead property; (2.) of practical steamship men as to the necessity of bulkheads and their importance to the city's commerce; (3.) the minutes of the Dock Department showing the actual prices paid by the city for property similar to that involved. This last evidence was rejected by the referee, who took the ground that it was not the "best evidence"—that the original deeds should be presented. The defendants' theory (that the measure of damages due the plaintiff should be the capitalization of the legal wharfage and cramage, amounting to $100 per running foot) was adopted by Mr. Cleveland, whose award was based on that valuation. The plaintiffs thereupon appealed to the General Term.

Judge Van Brunt, in his written opinion, rejects the defendant's wharfage theory which Mr. Cleveland adopted, and characterized the award of $100 per foot as "a mere bagatelle" and "ridiculously small." He refers the case back to Mr. Cleveland for the admission of that portion of the plaintiff's testimony which he rejected at the former hearing, namely, the minutes of the Dock Department, showing what the city has paid for similar rights.

Before the General Term the several plaintiffs were represented by Messrs. R. S. Emmet, Wheeler H. Peckham, William I. Marvin, and Thomas L. Orden. Thomas P. Wickes and Henry Twombly appeared for the city.

CONFIRMATION IN A FLOATING CHURCH

Bishop Potter Takes Part in the Services in the Sailors' Meeting House.

The announcement that Bishop Potter would confirm twenty boys and girls in the Floating Church of Our Saviour at the foot of Pike street yesterday afternoon attracted an unusually large number of visitors. The parents of the young people who were to be confirmed were all there, with their friends and their friends' children, besides the usual number of sailors and longshoremen who regularly attend the church. There were several members of the Church Missionary Society for Seamen present, who assisted the sexton in showing strangers where they could find seats. The boys and girls who were going to be confirmed sat in the two front pews. They were not all boys and girls, however. John Debasson, an old sailor, whose years numbered 67, whose hair was white and whose figure was bent with age, sat first in the row of boys who were to be confirmed. Beside him sat a youth of 19, a hearty, strapping fellow, who had served his apprenticeship on the sea. The other boys ranged from 14 to 17 years of age, and belonged to that large class of good boys who go to public school and Sunday school regularly, and spend their spare time in making the life of the neighbors miserable. There were eight girls between the ages of 14 and 18 years and a woman of 30. The girls all wore pretty dresses, mostly white; those whose parents could afford it wearing silk, while the others contented themselves with muslin and lawn. As they walked proudly down the aisle to their seats, the eyes of fond mothers followed them, and young girls who were not to have the pleasure of being confirmed whispered, "Ain't they nice?" There were a great many longshoremen present. Strong, weather-beaten men, who came tramping down the incline which leads into the church, hat in hand, and stood awkwardly in the doorway until they were led to seats.

The boat on which the church is built would sway gently as the wind drove light waves against it. The sunlight poured brightly through the simple stained glass windows of the wooden structure and fell on a strange congregation. In the front were the happy young people who were to be confirmed; behind them were laborers and seafaring men, well-dressed young clerks who lived in the neighborhood, and several tough-looking young men, wives of workmen with babies in their arms, and three or four society ladies, who, as patronesses of the church, were interested in the exercises. And the same sunbeam which revealed a patched dress or threadbare coat seemed to set fire to diamonds.

Shortly after 3 o'clock a carriage drove up to the church and Bishop Potter and Cornelius Vanderbilt got out. They entered the church and went into the vestry room. Mr. Vanderbilt soon came out and took a seat in one of the rear pews, beside a small boy who evidently didn't know who his neighbor was, for he looked curiously into the face of the railroad magnate and smiled. Mr. Vanderbilt took a hymn book and joined in the singing.

The Rev. J. J. Walker, assisted by the Rev. J. A. Cookman, conducted the regular service, after which Bishop Potter read the confirmation questions. After blessing each one of the applicants for confirmation, he addressed a few words to them about the meaning of the ceremony. He then spoke to the congregation about a seaman's life, and said:

"None are more entitled to our sympathy than those who separate themselves from their families, to carry on the world's commerce in time of peace and their country's defence in time of war."

Among those present were Mr. Benoni Lockwood, Mr. William Jewett, Mr. F. T. Warburton, Mr. W. H. Butterworth, Mr. A. Journeay, Mr. T. P. Cummings, and Mrs. William Waller Astor.

He was graduated from West Point in 1838, and for more than thirty years was principal of the Sing Sing Military Academy. He was secretary of the Seamen's Missionary Association for many years, and also warden of Trinity Church, Sing Sing. In 1875 he left Sing Sing and came to this city. He opened a school at No. 345 Madison-ave., which he continued until about seven years ago, when he retired from active business. His wife had been dead nearly ten years. YEAR'S WORK FOR THE GOOD OF SEAMEN.

The annual meeting of the American Seamen's Aid Society was held yesterday afternoon, in the hall of the Sailors' Home, at No. 190 Cherry-st. George Gray presided. Resolutions were adopted expressing the thanks of the society to the Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford for preaching the annual sermon to the society on Sunday, and to the Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford for the use of the Collegiate Reformed Church, in the city, at Forty-eighth-st., also to the choir for their services on that occasion. The treasurer's report showed a cash balance of $4,275 99. The following were elected trustees for three years: William A. Barnes, A. Gifford Agnew, James P. Wallace, and G. Ropes. After the election of trustees resolutions were made by the Rev. J. H. Edwards, H. F. Hickok, the Rev. C. J. Jones, of Snug and Mr. Boulton.

The attendance at the services is large. The interest of the men of the sea in the services of our church is very marked. Every sailor visiting the chapels of the society receives a Bible, Prayer Book, or Hymnal, should he not already have one. Bibles in every language are provided. During the last month nearly 2,000 persons visited the reading room of the North River Station.

On Sunday, the 23d inst., the Rev. A. H. Proffitt, recently of Norwood, N. J., assumed charge of the Floating church, foot of Pike street, East river. Mr. Proffitt is to carry on the work among the sailors under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen, at its East river station, where the late Rev. Robert J.

MISSION WORK FOR SEAMEN.

The Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan was prevented by a severe cold from saying as much as he had intended at the Church of the Heavenly Rest yesterday morning with regard to the work being done by the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen in the City and Port of New-York. The society maintains three stations, one being the well-known Floating Church of Our Saviour, at Pike Slip, one at Coenties Slip, and one at West and Houston sts. A chapel and reading-room are connected with each station. The president of the society is Bishop Potter; the clerical vice-presidents are the Rev. Drs. Morgan Dix, Charles F. Hoffman, Arthur Brooks, D. H. Greer, D. Parker Morgan, John W. Brown, Henry Lubeck, W. R. Huntington, E. W. Donald and H. Mottet; and the lay vice-presidents are John Davenport, Thomas P. Cummings, E. M. Duncan, R. S. Holt and H. A. Oakley; corresponding secretary, Henry Rogers; recording secretary, J. H. Morrison, Jr. Among the lay managers Cornelius Vanderbilt, H. A. Oakley and Captain A. T. Mahan, U. S. Navy, are particularly active. J. Pierpont Morgan is also one of the managers. Dr. Morgan in his discourse laid stress on the fact that sailors had no settled home, and when ashore were subject to particular temptation.

DEATH OF HENRY P. MARSHALL

Henry Perry Marshall, the cashier of Bank for Savings, died suddenly yesterday in the lunch-room of the bank, at No. 71 West 34th st., was eating his luncheon at the time, warping fell over in his chair, dying before he could be summoned, and never recovered consciousness. There had been no previous warning, and he had apparently been in his usual health at the time of his death. The coroner's body, and gave a permit for its removal to No. 214 East Seventeenth-st.

Mr. Marshall was seventy-four years of age, well known in down-town business circles, and also been prominent in church work. He was an old New-York family, but he was born in Newbury, Conn., where his grandfather had been the rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the town. In his grandfather's house the annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country was held, and in the district near by, Mr. Marshall will be buried next week.

Mr. Marshall came to New-York where he was employed for a time in a large manufacturing establishment, and afterward served as Consul for several years in India. He entered the service of the Seamen's Bank, and with it continuously until his death, began in 1865. He was also known as an organist in St. George's Church and in many churches. He occupied official positions at various times in the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen, the American Tract Society, the Bible Society, and the Mercantile Association. He had been married for forty years, his wife having died only a few months ago. Three daughters and one son, Henry Rutherford, who is an architect, survive him.

Mr. Marshall was a man of sturdy physique, fine appearance, and had always enjoyed excellent health that he was able to get an insurance on his life after he had passed his seventy years. His death is supposed to have been caused by a heart failure. He usually passed his summer at the old homestead in Woodbury, although a few years ago he had secured a country home on the Hudson. Previous to the removal of the body to Westchester, a funeral will be held in St. George's Church on Monday morning.
